Decades after the fall of authoritarian regimes in the 1970s, transitional justice has proven to be anything but transitional. It has become a cornerstone of state policy and a powerful tool of state formation, contextualizing cultural and political shifts in Argentina after the 1976 military coup. Comparisons to other countries in the Southern Cone suggest that incorporating human rights practices into official policy became a way for state actors to both build the authority of the state and manage social conflict—a key aim of post-cold war democracies. By examining the relationship between transitional justice and the Latin American political order, this book illuminates overlooked dimensions of state formation in the age of human rights.

This book brings to light central topics that are neglected in current histories and theories of architecture and urbanism. These include the role of imitation in earlier centuries and its potential role in present practice, the necessary relationship between architecture, urbanism, and the rural districts and their counterpart in the civil order that builds and uses what is built. The narrative traces two models for the practice of architecture—one follows the ancient model in which the architect renders his service to serve the interests of others; it survives and is dominant in modernism. The other was first formulated in the fifteenth century by Leon Battista Alberti, who has the architect use his talent in coordination with others to contribute to the common good of a republican civil order that seeks to protect its own liberty and that of its citizens. Palladio practiced this way, and so did Thomas Jefferson when he founded a uniquely American architecture. The counterpart to the nation’s founding this narrative gives particular emphasis to the contrasting developments in architecture on the opposite sides of the English Channel.
