Criminal Laws 2012: A comparative analysis of maritime law and its administration in five northern European towns. It has often been assumed that there was a common maritime law in northern Europe shared between skippers and merchants who conducted their business along the north sea and Baltic littoral. This study examines this assumption by studying the dissemination of law compilations across this region and comparing the contents of these and the judgments passed by urban courts in cases of shipwreck, jettison, and ship collision. Medieval maritime law has never before been the subject of a major study in the English language. The practice of maritime law has up until now largely been ignored. This book is the first to offer a comparison of maritime laws and court proceedings. It is also unique in that it provides a truly comparative history covering a large geographical area stretching from Aberdeen on the North Sea coast to Reval, present-day Tallinn, in the innermost regions of the Baltic.

Law and Anthropology 1996: A quick reference guide presents a useful overview and accessible summary of the main legal provisions and principles.
