Flight An Epic of the Air 2021-03-26
after having published 23 books relating to aerial photography a thought lingered in garrett fisher s mind during many ensuing flights is it possible to produce an entire book from the photographs from one flight while it was a source of philosophical musing for some time the reality is that the aircraft used for photographs flies slowly and has only three hours of flying time before fuel exhaustion with the demands of variety quality and a reasonable level of interest it had not until this point crossed mr fisher s mind to try on one illustrious flight in the bernese alps of switzerland after a summer snowfall well into the flight where it was nearing its conclusion he decided that this was the one turning the airplane past the airport wringing extra minutes out of the flight while over magnificent terrain long told by passengers and friends that rides taken in the airplane were one of the best experiences of their lives the work conveys the magnitude of what it is like to ride along in the airplane in some of the world s more majestic scenery while aerial photography is taking place with furious passion containing 118 images the book presents stunning imagery in chronological order with written anecdotes explaining key sections of the flight and the process behind it as it proceeded from gstaad airport over interlaken susten pass around titlis and then back along the winterberg massif triflglilscher and the north faces of the major bernese alps peaks south of grindelwald and lauterbrunnen including the jungfrau it continues west until the french speaking section of the country rounding the bend at les diablerets before crossing sanetschpass and landing back at gstaad airport in the late evening tucked in the bernese oberland the realisation that the airplane could play a part in naval warfare appears to have struck three naval officers one each from the british american and french fleets at the same time and in the same place the improbable scene was an international air show near the french city of rheims in august 1909 the heady performances they witnessed inspired the three attaches to advise their superiors that the airplane might one day provide far seeing eyes for a fleet or even become an offensive weapon before this could happen however a way would have to be found to get the frail short range aircraft aloft at sea the development of effective aircraft carriers would be a long process marked by painful trial and error but would result in the production of the most powerful seagoing weapons in history
