Recognizing rapidly ageing population is one key concern faced by cities and the challenge it would present to healthcare system this book looks at ageing in China's population as well as the delivery and financing of long-term care. It discusses key features of long-term care insurance schemes in 15 pilot cities and evaluates the sustainability of various financing models adopted by the cities. The book uses an interpretive case study approach to give an in-depth look into the LTC models in three pilot cities. It also explores the three cities' representation of different models of financing and delivering LTC. It assesses how effective the LTC models in these three cities are. The book uses five criteria including utilization of medical resources, cost, equity, quality, and sustainability. The authors discuss how the financing and delivery of LTC can be improved in China. The impact of the 2019 coronavirus COVID-19 pandemic on older adults in need of LTC in the country and the implications of China's LTC reform for other countries is also discussed.

The book also examines the impact of urban aging and healthcare costs and delivery. Long-term care is an increasingly important issue in many contemporary welfare states around the globe. Given the aging populations, this groundbreaking book provides detailed case studies of 11 EU member states' welfare regimes within Europe to show how welfare states organize structures and deliver long-term care. It also discusses whether there is a social investment perspective in the delivery of long-term care. This perspective is important because the effect of demographic transitions is often used as an argument for the existence of economic pressure on welfare states and a need for either direct retrenchment or attempts to reduce welfare state spending. The book's chapters will look specifically into how different welfare states have focused on long-term care in recent years and what type of changes have taken place with regard to ageing populations and ambitions to curb increases in public sector spending in this area.

They describe the development in long-term care for the elderly after the financial crisis and also discuss the boundaries between state and civil society in the different welfare states. The book approaches the delivery of care covering the full spectrum of long-term care. It provides an evidence-based approach to practitioners and postgraduate students to understand about the critical care needs of the patients suffering from malignancies. It helps the readers develop critical thinking and encourages discussion towards improving the overall care of the patients and their families. As their optimal management requires expertise in oncology, critical care, and palliative medicine, there is a dearth of books explaining about the special requirements and critical care needs of cancer patients. Each chapter is prepared by an expert in the field and contains well-prepared illustrations, flowcharts, and relevant images. The book includes latest evidence-based information which is useful for the readers. The book is useful for residents, fellows, and trainees in the field of onco anaesthesia, onco critical care, onco surgery, critical care, and anaesthesia. Practitioners and consultants in anaesthesia and onco anaesthesia as well as intensivist critical care experts and postgraduates in nursing.

Young People in Out-of-Home Care
child abuse is typically considered to be the most severe form of early adversity to which children or adolescents can be subjected. Maltreated young people seen as at the highest risk are likely to be placed in out of home care for their own protection including foster care, kinship care, group care, or independent living. Young people in out of home care is based on more than two decades of applied research and evaluation conducted since 2000 as part of the ongoing Ontario Looking After Children (Onlac) Project. The Onlac project was based on a new child welfare approach known as looking after children developed in the UK in the late 1980s and 1990s to reform and improve services to vulnerable young people who were being looked after in out of home care when launched in 2000. The Onlac project Canadianized the UK approach and partnered with the Ontario Association of Children’s Aid Societies (OACAS) and some 20 children’s aid societies in the province. Since 2007, the Ontario government has mandated that local societies use the Onlac method to plan services and monitor outcomes. Since 2000, the Ontario Looking After Children Onlac Project has gathered information on results and well-being from interviews with more than 35,000 young people in care, their caregivers, and their child welfare workers. Young people in out of home care presents major project findings and lessons that promise to improve young people’s education, development, health, social, and family relationships, mental health, and preparation for transition to community life.

Local Governance Innovation in China
despite a centralized formal structure Chinese politics and policy making have long been marked by substantial degrees of regional and local variation and experimentation. These trends have, if anything, intensified as China’s reform matures. Though often remarked upon, the politics of policy formation, diffusion, and implementation at the subnational level have not previously been comprehensively described, let alone satisfactorily explained. Based on extensive fieldwork, this book explores how policies diffuse across China today. The mechanisms through which local governments actually arrive at specific solutions and the implications for China’s political development and stability in the years ahead. The chapters examine how local level institutions solve governance challenges such as rural development, enterprise reform, and social service provision. Focusing on diverse policy areas that include land use, state-owned enterprise reform, and house churches, the contributors all address the same overarching question: how do local policymakers innovate in each issue area to address governance challenges and how, if at all, do these innovations diffuse into national politics? As a study of local governance in China today, this book will appeal to both students and scholars of Chinese politics, comparative politics, governance, and development studies, and also to policymakers interested in authoritarianism and governance.
