Section 202 and other HUD rental housing programs for low income elderly residents (Read Only)

Heumann and Boldy define and analyze emerging programs to help the frail and low income elderly stay out of institutions and age in place in their communities with proper support systems. The case studies presented describe the latest thinking and innovative public program solutions to aging in place in highly developed industrialized countries including Australia, Canada, Great Britain, Israel, Japan, Sweden, and the United States. Heumann and Boldy link these studies and describe the conditions and constraints under which existing programs function.

Chapter 1 examines the benefits and limitations to aging in place policies and programs on the broadest level, including the economic trends that have created the urgency for new government policies. Chapter 2 presents the classification system of aging in place solutions so that the case examples can be viewed in a comparative context of approach and government commitment. Chapters 3-7 discuss subsidized housing solutions in the United States, Canada, Great Britain, and other developed countries. Chapters 8-12 review community support programs in Australia, Israel, Sweden, and Japan. Chapter 13 summarizes the case findings, adds data to the editors' overall classification model, and discusses how government assistance could and should evolve in the future. Aging in place with dignity is designed to help government and voluntary service planners and providers at the federal and local levels deal with the complex and urgent problem of enabling the frail elderly to age in place.

Find out how housing options for the elderly are changing and not always for the better. To maintain or improve their quality of life, many seniors in the United States will move to new locations and into new types of housing. Housing for the elderly addresses the key aspects of the transitions they face. It examines how housing programs can help and looks at the role social workers can play to ensure they remain healthy, happy, and productive as they age. Housing for the elderly provides the tools to build a comprehensive understanding of how housing is changing to support the growing number of elderly persons in the United States. This unique resource examines a full range of housing options including assisted living communities, elder friendly communities, and homelessness. It looks at the effects of the Olmstead decision of 1999 which requires states to place persons with disabilities in community settings rather than in institutions and summarizes current research on naturally occurring retirement communities (NORCs). The book also presents a historical perspective of housing issues for the elderly with a special focus on the discrimination of African Americans in housing for the elderly. It includes creating elder friendly communities, homelessness among the elderly, and the role of social workers in supporting the elderly and their caregivers. The book also examines the impact of the Olmstead decision on the elderly, social workers, and healthcare providers. New York State's experience with NORCs and relocation concerns of people living in...
The integration of services for the elderly into housing settings, particularly low income housing, is an essential resource for social work practitioners, administrators, researchers, and academics who deal with the elderly. Based on interviews and case records, this study of low income older persons who hold part-time jobs fills an important gap in research about the work experiences of this segment of our population. Although part-time work for the elderly persons studied has both negative and positive consequences, the authors conclude that overall, the positive aspects far outweighed the negative ones. This book makes an important contribution toward furthering our understanding of part-time jobs in general and serves as a valuable resource for knowledge about low income elderly workers. In particular, this book introduces the Japanese urban food desert (FD) and examines the effects of social and economic change on the aging populations of Asia.

The second section addresses such topics as abuse, depression, eating disorders, HIV/AIDS, injuries, and religion and spirituality, often dividing such topics into separate entries addressing childhood, adolescence, and adulthood. This volume consists of eleven original papers that survey the state of the art in research and public policy regarding specific problems and opportunities confronted by resource communities. The papers are international in scope and deal with the experiences of resource communities in four nations: Canada, Norway, the United Kingdom, and the United States.

This book examines how locality in Japan has been reconstituted from historical and contemporary instances of administrative restructuring to more subtle social processes of making and unmaking local places. Contributions from multiple disciplinary perspectives are included to investigate the tensions between overlapping and often incongruent dimensions of locality framed by a theoretical discussion of socio-spatial thinking. Such issues surrounding the construction and renegotiation of local places are not only relevant for Japan specialists but also connected with topical scholarly debates further afield. Accordingly, rethinking locality in Japan will appeal to students and scholars from Japanese studies and human geography to anthropology, history, sociology, and political science. A collection of 47 portions of essays, articles, and books addressing many of the social, political, and legal problems occasioned by having an increasing number of older Americans first defines and explores the emerging field of elder law.
