On the outcome of the battle of Saipan hung the fate of the Pacific war. If the Japanese were to lose this island, then the home islands would finally be in range of serious American bombing. As the fanatical resistance of the Japanese was raised to fever pitch by the exhortations of the high command, whilst the Marines who had learnt hard lessons on assault landings knew that the capture of Saipan could shorten the war immeasurably so was set one of the bloodiest battles of the entire Pacific campaign. The Japanese fought with insane courage leading to massed Banzai charges and civilian suicides. Matches by the gritty determination of
