thirty years of experience in community development practice Eric Shragge offers a unique historical perspective on activism linking various forms of local organizing to the broader goal of fundamental social change. This new edition places contemporary community organizing in a post 9/11 context and includes a discussion of national and international organizing efforts in the Middle East in the Occupy movement in Europe, resistance to austerity measures, and recent student protests in Quebec. A new chapter length case study covering Shragge’s long-term involvement with the Immigrant Workers Centre in Montreal offers one of the few English-language discussions of community organizing in Quebec activism and social change. This is an excellent core or supplementary text in courses on social movements, community organizing, or community development.

Lesson study has been actively introduced from Japan to various parts of the world starting with the US. Such introduction is heavily connected with a focus on mathematics education and there is a strong misconception that lesson study is only for mathematics or science. The introduction is usually done at the departmental or form level and there has been a strong question about its sustainability in schools. This book comprehensively explores the idea of lesson study for learning community (LSLC) and suggests that reform for the culture of the school is needed in order to change learning levels among the children, teachers, and even parents in order for this to happen. The ways of management and leadership are also included as objectives of LSLC. As practices at the classroom level it argues that LSLC is a comprehensive vision and framework of school reform and needs to be taken up in a holistic way across disciplines. Chapters include how to create time, how to build the team, how to promote reform, how to reform daily lessons, how to conduct a research lesson, how to discuss observed lessons, how to sustain school reform based on LSLC, strong interest in LSLC is already prevalent in Asian countries such as Japan, China, Korea, Taiwan, Indonesia, Vietnam, and Singapore, and is now being introduced more in the West.

This book will be of great interest to those involved in education policy and reform and for practitioners of education at all levels. A community school differs from other public schools in important ways. It is generally open most of the time, governed by a partnership between the school system and a community agency, and offers a broad array of health and social services. It often has an extended day before and after school features parent involvement programs and works for community enrichment. How can such a school be structured? How can its success be measured? Community schools in action: Lessons from a decade of practice presents the Children’s Aid Society’s (CAS) approach to creating community schools for the 21st century. CAS began this work more than a decade ago and today operates thirteen such schools in three low-income areas of New York City through a technical assistance center operated by CAS. Hundreds of other schools across the country and the world are adapting this model based on their own experiences working with community schools. The contributors to the volume supply invaluable information about the selected program components. They describe how and why CAS started its community school initiative and explain how CAS community schools are organized integrated with the school system. Sustained and evaluated, the book also includes several contributions from experts outside of CAS, a City Superintendent, an architect, and the Director of the Coalition for Community Schools. Co-editors Joy Dryfoos, an authority on community schools, and Jane Quinn, CAS’s Assistant Executive Director of Community Schools, have teamed up with freelance writer Carol Barkin to provide commentary linking the various components together for those interested in transforming their schools into effective child and family-centered institutions. This book provides a detailed road map for those concerned with educational and social policy. The book offers a unique example of research-based action that has significant implications for our society.

Community Schools in Action 2005 through this book it is my sincere hope that far from providing any absolute answers to problems confronting community that i provide the conceptual tools necessary to engage in community work and appreciate the value of that work and its place in our larger society but a more pressing dilemma presents itself the dilemma that community as a valid and meaningful social construct is losing relevance community represents the best of what people can accomplish when they work together but in practice community is irreconcilable with prevailing economic political and social trends when i was younger i believed that it was possible to develop a political framework and from that political framework could and would emerge the complementary and supportive social and civic institutions necessary to support protect and evolve that framework i have come to believe that politics institutional arrangements and social organization instead follow from the dominant economy as such in an economy dominated by attributes dependent upon a pliant mobile workforce there is little practical tolerance for social organization beyond the individual the family and church groups it is my sincere hope that this book serves as a wake up call to the valuable attributes of community as a social construct but also how community is a necessary predicate to popular democracy the preservation of which should represent a cause that we treat as a valuable legacy instead of an underlying social circumstance we all take for granted while all its meaning and relevance is slowly being dismantled lessons from educational leaders addresses how educational leaders have made efforts to reconnect their schools to their communities and the varied goals they achieved the contributors of this book are educational leaders who have stayed committed to their neighborhoods and who have seen the moral imperative to provide equal opportunity to all students this book shares their experiences particularly looking at community based schools in urban impoverished or immigrant communities communities that often are disconnected from the political and economic centers of the country Lessons in Community and National Life 1918 how do citizens in poor communities benefit from and perceive state interventions how do citizens in poor communities interact with others in the community to promote the well being of themselves and their families what are the implications of the above for community based research policy and practice development social policy and community action lessons from below addresses these questions based on rigorous and multi faceted research conducted in the poor urban area of doornkop soweto using a range of different methodological approaches and theoretical perspectives that all broaden our understanding of citizen community state interactions indisadvantaged urban communities in soth africa solutions to poverty and inequality are often designed implemented and evaluated in a topt down manner thereby disregarding the views and agency of the poor citizens themselves addressing this gap the authors explore how government assistance through social grants and services as well as community support mechanisms provide solutions to citizens in poor communities and the ways that the citizens perceive and make use of such interventions this research study points to the need for more nuanced policy strategies and interventions pertinent to local challenges which also resonate with the global search for solutions in similar contexts with a fresh perspective that addresses the interconnections between state interventions community and citizens in sustainable social development this book provides a case for the importance of conducting community based research that effectively encourages research findings to support communities to effect positive change

A community school differs from other public schools in important ways. It is generally open most of the time governed by a partnership between the school system and a community agency and offers a broad array of health and social services. It often has an extended day before and after school features parent involvement programs and works for community enrichment. How should such a school be structured, how can its success be measured? Community schools in action: lessons from a decade of practice presents the Children's Aid Society's CAS approach to creating community schools for the 21st century. CAS began this work more than a decade ago and today operates thirteen such schools in three low income areas of New York City through a technical assistance center operated by CAS. Hundreds of other schools across the country and the world are adapting this model based on their own experiences working with community schools. The contributors to the volume supply invaluable information about the selected program components they describe how and why CAS started its community school initiative and explain how CAS community schools are organized, integrated with the school system, sustained, and evaluated. The book also includes several contributions from experts outside of CAS, a city superintendent, an architect, and the director of the Coalition for Community Schools. Co-editors Joy Dryfoos, an authority on community schools, and Jane Quinn, CAS's assistant executive director of community schools, have teamed up with freelance writer Carol Barkin to provide commentary linking the various components together for those interested in transforming their schools into effective child and family centered.

Community Schools in Action 2005-03-24: Excerpt from Americanization and citizenship lessons in community and national ideals 1. Preparing for citizenship in this book, we shall study the organization of our government and the work which it performs. We shall see that it is a representative government that its welfare depends upon the interest which the citizens take in it. Do you not think then that every new American should be familiar with the history of our country which abounds in glorious deeds and great achievements? Should you not also study our country's government and institutions since you will one day help to carry on that government? Then, do you not wish to understand clearly the great ideals for which our nation stands? The ideals which throw so much light upon our national development.

Self-reliance as a national characteristic foremost among the ideals which have characterized our national life is the spirit of self-reliance. The very first chapter of our national history records the story of a man who arose from among the toilers of his time and whom eighteen years of disappointed hopes could not dismay. Christopher Columbus.
